4. CHIEF CONSTABLE'S REPORT

Chief Constable Iain Livingstone (CCLivingstone) provided a detailed summary of the paper. In addition to the information provided in the paper, he highlighted the following additional points:

- CCLivingstone welcomed new Members and highlighted the engagement session held in April between Members and Police Scotland which allowed initial introductions and the opportunity to share information.
- CCLivingstone provided operational updates relating to several murder investigations and serious crime investigations.
- CCLivingstone highlighted that the policing approach during the pandemic was underpinned by the consent of the public, a commitment to uphold and enable human rights, to ensure the rule of law and ensure people do the right thing during a national crisis.
- CCLivingstone noted that over the previous 15 months, due to a variety of issues, people have sought to protest over legislative concerns, and Police Scotland have asked people to make their voices heard in a manner that does not put people at risk.

SCOTTISH POLICE
AUTHORITY

CCLivingstone stated that people should not be participating in mass gatherings and that message has been repeated by Police Scotland and other public bodies. Where gatherings have occurred, Police Scotland have taken a proportionate approach that protects people and minimises community disruption.

- Regarding the events at George Square, Glasgow, on 15 May, CCLivingstone advised that a dedicated enquiry team had been established to identify those responsible for violence and criminal activity and a public portal had been set up to allow the public to share information.
- CCLivingstone stated that policing will not discriminate between gatherings based solely on the cause behind it. He referred to the contents of the letter from JScott, highlighting the conclusion that the policing response to the events on 13 and 15 May was consistent with human rights considerations. CCLivingstone voiced his advocacy of the principle of the operational independence of policing as a key principle in a democratic society. CCLivingstone stated he welcomed the scrutiny, oversight and accountability of the force as it provides the opportunity for people to see Police Scotland's values and commitments, which he hoped would encourage support and challenge.
- CCLivingstone's personal assessment was that the response to events on 13 and 15 May were proportionate, and he fully supported the actions of the officers who made appropriate operational decisions. CCLivingstone thanked the officers and staff involved in the policing operations and condemned any violence and abuse against officers.
- CCLivingstone noted he was pleased that Scottish Government supported his assault pledge and called on the public and those in leadership roles to condemn attacks against police officers.
- CCLivingstone confirmed 500 armed officers would be equipped with body worn video during COP 26, and public consultation on the wider roll out will soon commence. CCLivingstone reinforced that the approach to policing COP 26 will be underpinned by the principle of policing by consent, by the rule of law and by a commitment to uphold and enable human rights.

In discussion the following matters were raised:

SCOTTISH POLICE
AUTHORITY

- Members shared concerns regarding the health, safety and wellbeing of officers and staff, and agreed that any assault or threat to health is unacceptable.
- Members sought further information on what support is given to officers injured and the long term support to those involved in traumatic situations. CCLivingstone highlighted Police Scotland are looking to encourage an organisational culture where officers and staff understand that experiencing violence and assault is not part of the job, and that officers and staff can come forward to seek assistance. Members were informed of the strong internal assistance programme for physical and psychological health, led by DCC Taylor.
- Members were assured that there was no undue political influence during the events on 13 and 15 May 2021.
- Members sought information on whether different tactical options would be available during COP 26, and what learning was taken from previous events. Members were informed tactics, operational tools and resources available for COP 26 will be the same but on a different scale. Members were assured that learning and key principles are taken from all events to inform the approach taken for future events, including communication and engagement.
- Members heard SPA and Police Scotland were co-hosting an engagement event in September to ensure an open, transparent discussion with interest groups on policing and protesting during COP 26. It was noted that discussion outcomes would be fed back to members.
- Members heard from JScott who confirmed events in Glasgow on 13 and 15 May fell within the remit of the Independent Advisory Group (IAG) with regard to the use of extraordinary powers relating to coronavirus. The IAG thought it would be artificial to consider those events only in relation to the use of powers as the group has expertise in human rights. The IAG had noted there had been much media and political discussion with a great detail of misunderstanding, specific to human rights. The group had discussed unhelpful narratives including individuals projecting their own bias onto the policing of activities, comparison of events and potential pressure on the operational independence of police. JScott noted that policing has responsibility for the rule of law but it requires operational independence and operational accountability.

AUTHORITY

He added politicians should be able to offer criticism but it should be responsible and well informed.

- Members sought further comment from JScott regarding his criticism of communication during the event on 13 May. JScott advised that the IAG heard a detailed account of concerns that there was a massive police presence based on the large number of police cars and vans in attendance. The IAG were informed the number of vehicles was due to the Covid-19 restrictions on the number of persons per vehicle, which provided an inaccurate impression of the police numbers involved. The IAG advised there would be benefit of having more detailed communications in response to concerns which were being raised.
- Members were informed 129 officers were injured during the week ending 15 May, with 47 of those injuries occurring on 15 May.
- CCLivingstone reflected on events from 13 May, noting that the policing approach was to facilitate safety and ensure other offences are not carried out. CCLivingstone stated that the due process undertaken by immigration officials would continue, but the circumstances were such that Police Scotland had to ensure the safety of all involved which took precedence.
- CCLivingstone advised Members he believed the events of 15 May demonstrated good communication from Police Scotland through a number of channels. CCLivingstone acknowledged social media narratives can grow quickly but there is a role for policing to put forward an authoritative statement which will work best if done in association with community figures. CCLivingstone reflected on the incident in West George Street in 2020 and the number of inaccurate assertions that came from respected media outlets. CCLivingstone confirmed Police Scotland will only communicate once the true facts are known.
- The Chair concluded that the independence of the Chief Constable and every constable is the cornerstone of policing in a democracy. Scottish civil and civic society, as well as the Authority, has to actively promote and guard that independence. The Chair noted that independence does not mean autonomy and Police Scotland is held to account in multiple ways. The checks and balances in the system are more extensive, more rigorous and more willingly entered into than anywhere else in the UK. The Chair reflected on the comments from JScott that operational independence may be an important anchor in a period of increasing identity politics and Scotland's unsettled identity politics. The Chair noted Police Scotland champions human rights which are not awarded on the basis of popularity or populism, and not selected or deselected according to the preference of the observer. The Chair noted the view of the IAG that there was no evidence of bias in operational decisions in Glasgow on 13 and 15 May and policing was informed by and consistent with human rights principles.

The Authority RESOLVED to:

- NOTE the update.
- AGREE the following action:

Members to be briefed on outcome of discussions held at roundtable event in September regarding policing and protesting COP 26.

He confirmed there would be a detailed programme implementation plan and that, together with the Chair, they had co-convened a meeting with scrutiny conveners where body worn video was discussed. He confirmed the timing of the technology introduction will be a significant focus of the Policing Performance Committee.
