Policing and the Pandemic

the Scottish Experience

A Research and Evidence RoundTable Event

Live Event

Wednesday 18th August 2021

10am to 2pm

Join Us Live - a welcome from our hosts

Over the last 18 months our police service in Scotland has, like all of us, adapted and innovated to meet the challenges posed by the coronavirus pandemic and the restrictions that have been put in place to help suppress its effect on our society.

Since March 2020 the relationship between the police and the many different communities they serve has been tested in an unprecedented way, yet we take much assurance from the evidence so far available that confidence in policing in Scotland during this public health crisis remains at least as strong as it was before the pandemic.

The legitimacy of policing comes from putting into practice the core principle of policing by consent. Many factors help to cement policing's legitimacy. The willingness of the police service to engage meaningfully with individuals, communities and their representatives and act, wherever possible, on what is being said, remains critical. Analysing and understanding vital data, evidence and other insights is also critical for setting the operational response, policy and policing strategy and for keeping these under review. Transparency in relation to the oversight of policing is crucial for building and maintaining trust, as is seeking expert advice and views, actively listening to people with lived experience, and seeking independent challenge.

We, as sponsors of this event, invite you to join in a discussion and debate and add to the growing bank of evidence relating to policing during the pandemic in Scotland. We are especially keen to hear about experiences and perspectives from beyond Scotland and have dedicated a key speaker input and a panel session explicitly for this purpose.

We set up our Joint Research and Evidence Forum in late 2019, and have hosted several conference-style RoundTable events prior to the pandemic. We've since shifted to the virtual space to continue our approach and we are using this technology to widen our reach. As a reminder and as useful context, our Joint Forum and its sponsored events aim to:

- Bring together expertise of police officers, academics, third sector and government.
- Explore innovation in use of both statistics and data in modern policing from a public benefit perspective.
- Explore areas of future research and evidence-based public debate.

You can watch the event live, submit questions during the event for consideration by our panels, and submit questions in advance using our Citizen Space portal. For further information, please visit our webpage or email us.

We very much look forward to you joining the event. Stay well and stay safe!
